

Reclaiming the narrative, identity and dignity of our living spaces and through it our lives.

Enough of the programmed obsolete, of the material one-upance, of the Dehumanisation of our cities, lives, futures, of hollow progress.

Lifting the veil of past crafts, arts, thoughts opens up a world of discoveries into lasting immaterial values & quality of life, of who we truly are.

The rediscovery of purpose in a runaway world controlled by the machines.

"Scrape off these walls"

Dear Nupur,

We would like to thank you for the guided tour of last week Thursday. The house is fabulous and so extraordinary beautiful that it moves your emotions. We absolutely enjoyed it.

The way you have awakened the house is impressive. We could feel your energy in the house. We are very interested in your research regarding the influence of India on the Art Nouveau and would be very happy to be informed about your findings. In case you have one, please be so kind to include us in your mailing list.

Again thank you for this inspiring tour. We wish you and your daughter many beautiful and happy years in Maison Frison!

Hope to meet again one day. Might you ever be in Zeeland / Middelbrug, please know that you are more than welcome to visit our modest house.

Just a short message to let you know that you inspired us to scratch our walls.. Old pictures showed us that there were decorations in our house around 1910. We thought they were lost in the renovation 20 years ago (unfortunately this was definitely not a restoration, many details were lost).

When we came back from our trip to Brussels we just wanted to be sure. And after some scratching Wim discovered the original decorations. See below pictures. So we are now also contacting some experts in the Netherlands to learn how to do this scratching in a professional way. It is just tiny compared to the Maison Frison but we love it!

*Warm regards,
Ellen en Wim*

The hall & stairs around 1910

We discovered the painting above the doors in the back.

Stairway on the first floor

